Plassey Holiday Park, Wrexham

Situated in Wales, yet close to the English border, Plassey Holiday Park is a luxurious campsite set in the farmland of the River Dee valley, a few miles south of Wrexham.

As well as a campsite, Plassey has activities to suit all ages. There is a row of independent shops, a coffee shop, restaurant and bar, a nine-hole golf course, an indoor heated swimming pool, a sauna, nature trails, dog exercise area, the Wiggins Way cycle track and five fishing ponds with rods to hire.

There really isn't any excuse for anyone to say, "I'm bored" here.

All the staff I met during our stay were helpful and friendly and I quickly got a sense of a well-run campsite. I was particularly taken with the beautifully produced booklet of local walks available at reception for £2. This includes some local history, as well as instructions and sketch maps for three walks of between five and seven miles in length, all starting at the campsite and including one to Erddig House, a nearby historic National Trust property.

After we had stretched our legs on the nature trail, we visited the very comfortable Treetops Bar overlooking the campsite for a thirst quenching pint of Plassey Bitter, brewed in the onsite micro-brewery.

I had a wander around the independent shops, which are set attractively in renovated Edwardian farm buildings. By the charming Stables Coffee Shop there is a pleasant garden area with benches to sit and enjoy the extensive view and a delightful bijou teddy bear house complete with bears to play with.

The site's pitches are all spacious and level. We were on a standard pitch on Spring Meadow – a quieter part of the site with views across the Dee Valley. The modern sanitary facilities are clean and heated in winter: an added bonus for me is that the shower temperature is adjustable so I could have the sort of hot shower I enjoy.
